POLITICS AND MORALS. What the Garden City is Doing in

A Bad Showing Made for Chicago,

Political Topics

[Correspondence Salt Lake Henald.] CHICAGO, July 12, 1880. The political campaign has not yet reached a state of activity that promises to exhaust the partisans pefore the summer solutice has waned. Neither party here seems to be distressing itself about matters of organization. Noted as is Chicago, according to our daily papers, as a summer resort, everybody wine can afford the time and money will leave town for a week or two in Julius. town for a week or two in July or Angust, and as toes "getaways" comprise a large proposition of the leading people in most public activities and enterprises, it is safe to say that not much will be done during these two months, and that little will be merely susangule and main. be merely spasmodic and unin-fluential. Still the world has to move or make a point of it all the time. The Board of Trade men continue to exercise their longs as fiercely as ever; the daily capers have to appear whether or no, and it is their business to keep up an excitement, in startling head-lines and horrid topics, no matter if the people are too het or too lary to move. It is sometimes quite agonizing to witness the efforts of the city cultors to create a zensa-tion among their readers. The Times of late has been vigilant in quest of rich and rare physical and moral scents with which to regale its crowd of panting citizens. It possesses the art too, of dealing with odorous art 100, of dealing with odorous proporties without using a disin-fectant, and manages that the stench shall lose pone of its richness by the stirring up operation. Its descriptions of the filth of the Chicago river were faithfully drawn, and its characterization of General Hancock's alleged physical peculiari-ties were artistically lucid. Its latest presentation of one of Chicago's great industries, bowever, has attracted industries, however, has attracted more attention perhaps than any other of its recent senations, since it is regarded as an authority on the subject.

On the 9th instant, the Trans published a remarkable editorial on the questionable cocial relations of Chicago, starting out on the basis of 1,200 "open prostitutes" in the city, or one to every 420 inhabitants, or about or one to every 420 inhabitants, or about one to every 60 or 70 of the

But even this is not the worst There is another class, "barlots in everything but the name, made up of women of every grade of society, and women of every grade of society, and who resort to prostitution from the pressure of an almost inconceivable number of motives. These are servants, ecwing girls, clerks, and others of this grade who have an occupation, and with whom harlotry is epizocite, and who resort to it in the main to increase their slender earnings." "Above this class in social standing, but infinitely below it in merals, is another which is made up of women who occupy good next the resord to the resord to the resonance of the present and the present are raging along the line of the St. John, N. moralizes on these results, of course, advocating a public registry of all prostitutes, male and female, on the principle that the extent of an evil known and understood its availance known and understood its availance or suppression becomes less difficult than when it is carried on in secret. But the oracle fails to suggest any plan for completing its registry, which evidently would involve greater labor than taking the United States census. Perhaps the ecterprising Times detectives might undertake the job and make a great success of it, as they are reputed to know the slums and pitialls of Chicago better even than the regular police force.

SATISFACTION GUABANTEED,
KEYSER & MORIT7

I observe that the Times rehashes my last letter to the Herald in its editorial columns, taking some exceptions to its language. But the Times, aside from successing at all parties and all politicians, invariably wastes its ammunition in fault-finding. That it is thoroughly independent in politics cannot be doubted, but its editorial writers seem to have no comprehension of such a thing as a constitutional principle. One of its recent sage ideas was the discovery that the governors of eighteen KEYSER & MORIT7 about one to every 60 or 70 of the adult male population. Adding to this number of vile women another 1,200 of the same character, estimated as living, not in houses in common, but in apartments by themselve, a total of 2,400 women of this class is hund, bringing the supply "of at least one of these women to 50 or 35 of our adult population of the stonger sax."

good positions in society, and who have lovers apart from their own insbands," etc., etc. Both of these latter classes, the Times allows, 'are just as much prostitutes as the women who have no concealment of their position, and they are thrice as degraded and vastly more dangerous and demoralizing to society."

But it seems unnecessary to follow the editorial in detail. It is sufficient to say that its final estimate makes the number of lewd women in the city "one to every ten or fifteen of our adult male population." If this population may be retimated at 100,000, and it is probably more than this, the prostitute class would reach from 7,000 to 10,000 soule. The Times moralizes on these results, of course.
